BEAUTY IN THE BATH.

THE ROLLER RINKS DESERTED FOR A MORE SEASONABLE SPORT.

Modus Operandi of Teaching a School-Girl
the Art of Swimming—First Lessons of the Prussian Army System
—Quiet Cases.

Johnnie Lucifer's
"Yes," remarked an athletic young man, as he twirled his light mustache and looked complacently at the natty bathing-suit which clothed him from neck to knee, "yes, our young ladies—and gentlemen, too, for that matter—are dropping skater-rollers and getting ready for the salt water rollers to be met with on the beaches at Newport and Old Point Comfort."

The place was a long hall, the floor of which had been cut away in the center, the space planked up at the sides and then heavily coated with cement, forming an enormous bath-tub, as it were. The floor of the tub, or basin, sloped so that when full of water at one end it was four feet deep, at the other six or eight. Spring-boats, trapezes, and a shower with a twelve-foot drop extended over the water, and down the sides of the hall were ranged about forty dressing rooms. Boys of from 12 years of age up to men of 65 were apathetically about in the basin, diving from the boards and swinging from the trapezes. While the professor talked he kept his eye on the bathers.

He continued: "To give you an idea of the steps taken in teaching the art to women, we will imagine that this boy here is a young woman of say 18 years of age."

The boy was a remarkably lean specimen. His mother would not call him handsome. He was a triangular piece of shaped muscle about his ribs, and he was beating splashing water, and in company with a score of companions, doing his best to get 25 cents' worth of fun out of the water before his fair wife.

"Now we will imagine that this young man is a school-girl who comes to him for the purpose of learning to swim. It is bath-day, of course, and she is present in the bathing hall not only as a member of lady pupils. The bathing school is to retire to a dressing-room and get on a bathing suit like this."

The suit was of blue flannel, and consisted of two pieces—a high-cut waist and skirt reaching to the knees in one piece, a pair of long Kneekicker breeches the other.

"The suit, as you see, is perfectly modest, and is a facsimile of the more common sea-side costume. I place a belt about her waist in this fashion. I fasten a soft cotton tape to the belt thus. The end of the tape, as you see, is secured to a point and with that point in my hands I walk to the edge of the basin. The young lady wades out into the water until she has reached a sufficient depth, and then when I say 'now' she lets go, turns upon the water, the arms holding her in that position as securely and immovably as can be. Then 'now' and the young woman brings her arms around before her head with her hands together, 'twa, the hands are drawn in to the chest and the feet drawn up, 'thre, and the hands are rapidly straightened out, while the feet kick like the feet of a frog in the art of swimming. Those three simple motions are gone through with a number of times in each case, and during this time she knows that our young woman can swim."

"This is the system as taught in the Prussian army, and I do not hesitate to say it is the best method of teaching the art that is as yet known. After the lady has attained some little ability, and can thus the motions of her hands and feet so that they come together, I slacken the rope more or less, until in the course of time the rope is dispensed with altogether, and I follow with the end of the line in my hand until the pupil swims from end to end of the basin, through deep and shallow water alike. It is essential that she be taught to swim in water that is 'over head,' as the boys say. Of course, it is just as hard to swim in shallow water as in water 100 feet down; but, all the same, those swimmers who have attained the art in fair feet of water can not always swim when they learn there is no necessary bottom under them."

"I find a curious case of that kind last week. A young woman came in from Walnut Hill. She swam about very gracefully in the shallow end of the basin for a time, but when I asked her, 'Why don't you swim to the other end, where the water is deep?' she replied, 'I am afraid; I learned to swim in shallow water, and have never been out of my depth.'

"I saw that she was fairly expert, so I persuaded her to swim out to the six foot depth, taking the precaution, however, to fasten the beginner's rope about her waist. Suddenly she threw up her hands and would have gone but for the rope in my hands, which held her up and gently towed her out of the deeper place. She had not fainted and was not cramped in any way, but had merely lost confidence as soon as the thought crossed her mind that she was swimming in deep water."

LIFE.

Victor Hay's Gun in Inter Ocean]

To strive, to fail, to lose,

To struggle for some tantalizing prize,

To see them win the last-lifted race,

To fight, and tenton that for ever dies,

See others with effort gain the steep,

Follow the unattainable to grasp.

To live, to be, to work,

To strike our full name,

To help the noblest, and hiss and jeer,

To be a master of dissoluteness' cup,

To be a traitor, to flout

When lonely finds some grand triumphal song,

To fight in fortune with a careless smile,

To stand and be strong,

To pray, to witen, to trust,

To plead for strength, beseeching heavily,

Only aid,

To fall in our faith when sharply fails,

The law of ceasur on our shoulders fall,

To sink beneath the cross,

To take a battle of unceasing strife,

To give at last to death our joys and woes,

Thus ends the chapter of a human life.

DIPHTHERIA AND CROUP CURE.

Details of a Dangerous Case—Something Which Is Worth Trying.

[See Louisville Democrat.]

In a report to the French Academy of Medicine, Dr. Delthell stated that the vapors of liquid tar and turpentine wool 1 dissolve the fibrinous exhalations which choke up the throat in croup and diphtheria. It inscribes the process thus:

"Take equal parts say two tablespoonsfuls of turpentine and liquid tar, put them into a tin pan or cup and set fire to the mixture, taking care to have a large pen under it as a safeguard against fire. A dense smoke arises, minkling the room dark.

The patient immediately seems to experience relief; the choking and the rattles stop; the patient falls into a shiver and goes to sleep. The following day the patient is well.

The man remains soon become delirious, and the patient coughing intermissions. These when caught in a glass may be soon dissolved in the smoke. In the course of three or four days the patient entirely recovers."

The above information has been quite largely pieced into the papers, and with it the relief and cure in Ruth Lockwood, a year-old child, who was dangerously sick with diphtheria, but the disease readily yielded to the above mode of treatment, and the child was cured. A case occurring in Boston recently is worthy of note at this particular time, when the two forms of disease are quite prevalent. The facts in the case, in brief, are as follows:

Jennie Brown, a child of some 5 years of age, was dangerously sick with diphtheria; her attending physician had no hope of her recovery, he declared to a person that on account of the many cases under his treatment there were beyond cure, and little Jennie was one of that number. The father of the child had read of the above treatment, and that, too, without consultation with the attending physician—he obtained the mixture, taking two table-spoonfuls of each, but he now considers that one of each would have been sufficient, and there would have been less danger of burning the patient; the child was in bed, breathing so loud that it could be heard all over the house; but as soon as the tar and turpentine began to burn she was relieved, and breathed quite freely, and soon commenced to cough and raise; and to the father's surprise and delight she commenced to gain from that moment. He followed up this treatment for three nights, the attending physician approving it, and the child today is well. The other two children alluded to above did not have this form of treatment, and they are numbered with the blind.

I saw that she was fairly expert, so I persuaded her to swim out to the six foot depth, taking the precaution, however,

to fasten the beginner's rope about her waist.

Letter from Kansas

[To the Editor of the Interior Journal.]
MEDICINE LODGE, July 20.—This little city has a beautiful location, in fact the situation is all that could be desired, the town being on a ridge between the Medicine river and Elk creek. These two streams supply living water the year round. The centre of the town is on the backbone of this ridge and the main business street runs lengthwise. The gentle slope on either side is pretty well built up and the entire town is better drained than any other place that I have seen in the State, which makes it exceptionally healthy. There are several large business houses and a number of small ones. The church edifices are small and inferior, but they probably accommodate all who are disposed to attend. A few good people are entitled to much credit for what has been done in that line. The first thing that strikes the visitor is the number of brick buildings and side walks, the latter because of the scarcity of stone. Not much more than one half of Bourbon county can properly be called farming land, although the land agents will claim that it is nearly all tillable. The real estate men complain of business being exceedingly dull, though after the customary plant one of them confidentially informed me that he had sold two farms this week and had made a good thing out of them. Perhaps he did, it is not for me to be the first to doubt the word of a land agent, one of these guileless creatures who always tell you the bright, shiny features of the county and always throw dust in your eyes as to the dark side.

While there is not much wheat in southwest Kansas, say from Wellington, West, to the fields that are growing look well, especially in Harper and Bourbon counties. It is good when compared with other portions of the State. Corn looks well, being in many instances in shoot and tassel. Dats look well and will compare with any I have seen in Kentucky. The valleys of Bourbon are fertile, at least the growing crops show it up to the present time.

A meeting of the Garrard county Sunday school Union convened at the Presbyterian church Tuesday morning and continued until Tuesday night. Large crowds were in attendance and the meeting was of great interest. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Goodloe, Wishard, Reid, McKee, Gibson and Stephens. Essays were read by Miss Nellie Hopper and Mrs. B. M. Birdett, of this place. The solo by Rev. Wishard and Miss Gill were prominent features of the occasion.

James W. Tate is a much the nominee of the democratic party as if he had been declared to be the biggest convention in the State. The authority of the State Central and Executive Committees to place a candidate in the field under certain circumstances has been recognized time and again heretofore, and until this time has never been disputed, or even questioned. An issue is now made by a few individuals who have been dissatisfied with other results, and who have found this a convenient thing to grow over. It may be taken as a fact that, in less than thirty days, there will not be one of these parties who will not be ashamed of the ill nature and disaffection he has shown.

We trust no democrat will be deceived into voting for Judge Fox by his specious promises. Pretending to be a democrat he parades as a prohibitionist, while his candidacy is almost in the sole interest of the republican party, which has given him its virtual endorsement and any decrease in the regular democratic majority will be heralded as a gain for it: Were it a fair stand up fight on a prohibition issue alone, Judge Fox would poll only a few thousand votes, but by an alliance with the republicans he hopes to poll a numerically respectable vote, though he has not the slightest idea that he can do more than decrease Mr. Tate's majority. Some dissatisfaction is expressed in certain quarters in regard to the manner of the nomination of the latter gentleman, but this has been inspired more by a desire to find fault than any good reason. Truly he was nominated by the central and executive committees, but they had the right, supported by precedent, to do so when there were no other candidates and there was but one state officer to be nominated. It was the easiest, least costly and the best way under the circumstances and the committee should be praised, not blamed for their action. The nominee, Mr. James W. Tate, is a tried and true democrat and is as much the nominee as if the whole party had declared him so and it is the duty of every democrat to go to the polls and vote for him. We must not allow republican and prohibition trickery to reduce our majority in the State the first year of the national democratic administration. Let every democrat therefore vote for Tate and put the seal of condemnation on a so-called democrat, who permits himself to be used in its destruction by consorting and combining with the enemy.

The trial of Craig Tolliver and eight others, for murder most foul, has ended at Morehead in a disagreement of the magistrate, which according to the law, released the defendants. It is said that the magistrate who decided against law and order, went on the bench with his mind made up and not to be changed by evidence, to release the murderer and great indignation is felt towards him by the peace loving citizens. It is a great pity that the State troops should have been forced to the scene to assist in such a farce, but the laws are defective and demand to be changed. Attorney General Hardin is deserving of the warmest praise for the masterly manner in which he prosecuted the offenders, but even his strong arguments could not affect a court with its mind fully made up to acquit. The troops will now return home, but it is not their fault that they have accomplished nothing. It is a somber consolation to know however that Tolliver was said to have killed a man in effecting it. He was lodged in jail against the strong protests of his friends and Wednesday taken in irons and chained to his seat at the scene of his crime, where it is hoped the law will be enforced against him.

It is not certain that the democrats will have a majority in both branches of congress during Mr. Cleveland's term of office. The question is decided against them for the present Congress, for though they have a majority of 39 in the House, the defeat of Morrison by Logan in Illinois places them in a minority of eight in the Senate. This is inconvenient for the Administration for it can neither enact nor repeal laws, or obtain the confirmation of its appointments without the consent of its opponents. This will be the situation, with no hope of change, through the first two years of the democratic administration. The terms of nine democratic and sixteen republican Senators expire with the present Congress, but the democrats will have to elect a successor to each of the nine and gain five from the republicans to secure a majority. The N. Y. Sun says: 'The situation is not perfectly ascertained to the democrats, but a victory for them in both branches of the next Congress is by no means out of the question. If they would win, they must strike home, and some of their best blows must be dealt this fall, when parts of several State legislatures are to be chosen which will elect some of the twenty-five new Senators.'

In Kentucky had a Court of Appeals like Michigan, which does not search for technicalities and loop holes to free law breakers from penalties imposed by the lower courts, the reign of lawlessness which now disgraces the State would soon come to a full stop. Up in Michigan a couple of three card monte men were tried for swindling a victim and convicted of larceny. The case was appealed but the Judge promptly ruled as follows and we command it to our court at Frankfort for its future guidance: 'We do not think it profitable to draw ovens metaphysical distinctions to save thieves from punishment. If rogues conspire to get away a man's money by such tricks as those which are played here, it is not going beyond the settled rules of law to hold that the fraud amounts to stealing.'

The only really sensible interview we ever read from Joe Blackburn appeared in the Louisville Commercial, but he knocked all the fat in the fire by denying that he used the language attributed to him. He ought to have let that one stand and denied the many silly ones charged to him.

DEATH OF GEN. GRANT.

Gen. U. S. Grant, the great soldier, has surrendered at last to the grim destroyer, his death occurring yesterday morning at 8 o'clock at Mt. McGregor. The Louisville Times in referring to his approaching death paid the general this deserved eulogy: "He has rounded out his days, and death, whatever may have been its terrors in the past, will be welcomed now by the suffering man, who has felt his life slipping surely and painfully away during the tedious months of his illness. Throughout the Union, South as well as North, the sense of sadness at his going will be tempered by the reflection that his speechless agony is at an end; that the suffering and sorrows of his declining days can disturb him no more. His life-work done, his career ended, he sinks into the rest of the grave at a time when he has more true friends than at any other period of his life. God rest his soul in peace!"

The Frankfort Yankee is conducted by gentlemen of known honor and integrity, who could not be bought or driven into making a false statement concerning the State debt. We shall therefore accept its figures in preference to the Louisville Commercial's, Col. Morrow's or those from any other republican source. These latter went in to discover a mare's nest and intended to cackle whether they did or not. If the Commercial would look at the facts as they stand and not through its republican goggles everything democratic would not look so intensely black to it.

The democratic ticket is James W. Tate for State Treasurer and Maj. F. D. Rigney for Senator. But when you vote this your duty is only half done. See that you are recorded "for calling a constitutional convention, yes."

We have a long explanatory letter from Judge W. M. Beckner, received yesterday too late for this issue. He is after us about some comments on his Berea speech and we will give him space in our Tuesday's paper.

NOTES OF CURRENT EVENTS.

Hon. J. A. Munday, of Owensboro, has been appointed Special Agent for the General Land Office.

A. C. Quisenberry, an old and deserving newspaper man, is to be a deputy under Collector Robinson, we are glad to learn.

During the year ending June 30, 1885, 821 immigrants arrived in the United States, being 122,013 less than the immigration during the preceding fiscal year.

In the United States there are 24 corn starch factories. They make 250,000,000 pounds of starch per year, of which 100,000,000 pounds are used in this country.

The King of Dahomey has recently captured and massacred almost 1,000 French residents of his realm. The unfortunate will be barbecued for a national feast.

A German farmer living near Bloomington, Ill., indignant at his wife for suing for a divorce, drove all his stock into his barn and set fire to it, perishing in the flames himself.

Judge M. C. Alford has resigned as Judge of the Lexington Police Court to make the race for State Senate and Col. W. P. Walton is announced for the vacancy with no opposition.

At Bedford, Ia., Ida Kimball, a beautiful child, aged fifteen, the daughter of a leading business man, shot and killed W. T. Gile, a prominent music dealer. She claims that Gile seduced her.

"Ex-Rebel Brigadier" Mahone is complimented by a correspondent as a skillful and graceful dancer, but he will have to bop around pretty lively if he expects to elect his ticket, or any part of it, in the coming Virginia election.

Barnum's big elephant, "Albert," was killed in the presence of 2,000 spectators at Keene, N. H. He had killed his keeper, and was taken to a woods, chained to a tree, and shot by thirty-three members of the Keene Light Guard.

Mrs. Smith, the widow of Pate Strickline, who was murdered by Floyd Williams, had her trial at the special term of the Wolfe county court, charged with complicity in the murder of her husband, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for nine-nine years.

The democrats and republicans of Rowan county, desirous of a peaceful solution of the troubles which so long distract the public peace of that county, have nominated a fusion ticket for county officers, a republican for sheriff, and a democrat for his deputy.

The new Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Stevenson, is making things live in his department. Mr. Hay used to grind out about fifteen new democratic postmasters per day. The new man is said to create from fifty to a hundred every twenty-four hours.

The Washington correspondent of the Louisville Times telegraphs that the President has appointed 450 postmasters to date, leaving 1,783 to be named. There are about 51,000 fourth-class postmasters appointed by the Postmaster General. Of this number 3,500 have been filled by democrats since March 4.

Judge Ladd, at Greensburg, issued an order that all parties entering the court should be searched. In consequence of this two men were found with pistols in their pockets. One was placed under bond and the other sent to jail. Mike Rogers, shot by the Edwards party on Monday, was alive at last accounts, but not expected to live.

GEO. O. BARNES.

A Visit to the Vatican, the Wonder of Wonders.

ALWAYS PRAISING THE LORD.

"PROSPECT POINT," LANDOUR, N. INDIA, June 16th, 1885.

It is impossible to write down the deep impression made by the largest if not handsomest church on the planet. We walked under the towering immensity of the grand dome, and nave and aisle, amazed and still wondering the more the longer we looked, and that is all I can say, except to put down a few items, well known to travelers and in all the guide books. How the original church was erected by the Emperor Constantine on the site of the circus of Nero, where St. Peter is said to have suffered martyrdom. Of course Protestants will protest to the end of time, that St. Peter was never in Rome at all, and Romanists will aver that he was and that his remains are now under the great dome of this great cathedral. I decline to take sides, except to say that while I was in St. Peter's, I heartily wished the catholics might be right and half believed they were. But the wish was doubtless father to the thought."

Well, this has been a sacred spot for many centuries. In the year 800 Charlemagne was crowned emperor here and since then, many potentates have been invested with royal authority by many Popes, and the round slab of porphyry on which they stood to be crowned by the head of the Romish church, is still close to the great central door on the present pavement.

A church 1,500 years old is a very venerable relic, and I do not envy the sectarian bigotry that can despise St. Peter.

As is well known, in 1450 Nicholas V., one of the architecturally inclined among the "Holy Fathers," determined to reconstruct the old basilica on a grand scale; but died when the walls were only a few feet high. His successors having other things on hand, 50 years passed before the work was resumed, under Julius II.

I had always thought Michael Angelo planned St. Peter's. But he only carried out another plan. Bramante, of whom I never heard till I went to Rome, was the architect, and in accordance with his plan the foundation stone was laid in 1506; but he did not live long after that and his plan was not carried out by those who were entrusted with the work. Various tinkerers patched away at it, until in 1546, to his everlasting honor, Michael Angelo, getting control, rescued Bramante's mutilated plan and proceeded to carry it out. He made a lasting monument to himself in the glorious dome; that he only lived to finish the drum of, but left behind him models and drawings from which inferior hands could carry out what the master had designed. But again tinkerers came to the front and marred the majestic simplicity of the original plan, and hid the grand dome by a long projecting nave, contrary to the design of Bramante and Michael Angelo. The effect they intended the dome to produce can not now be appreciated except from a considerable distance. So architects say. I don't know anything about it. I believe them of course, and the guide books; but I must say that I was so paralyzed with surprise and wonder and delight at the grandeur and beauty still left, that I would never have discovered all these blunders if I had not been told about them. Nor did I see them, even after being apprised of the facts in the case. The fact is I went to enjoy St. Peter's and not to get into a controversy on orders of architecture. So I did enjoy it, and was not roused in mind at all by the mistakes that Popes planned and architects carried out.

the only monument of the kind at Rome, which has never been overthrown. Magnificent fountain 45 feet in height, stand on either side of the Obelisk. Altogether the approach is worthy of the incomparable structure it adorns.

To the right, at the end of the colonnades, is the brazen gate or entrance to the Vatican, where we went another day.

ROME, Monday, Feb. 23d.—To-day we visited the Vatican! Wonder of wonders! Wealth of master pieces! Treasures unequalled of art and science! Who can describe this city of a palace; with its 20 courts and 11,000 halls, chapels, saloons and private apartments; and 200 stairways, and—? The famous "Sain guard" keeps watch over the fading grandeur of the papacy. A detachment is always on duty at the brazen gate entrance, with gorgeous uniforms, covered with an outer coat, but if you get one of them to go into the guard room he will uncover and allow you to admire the artistic clothing devised by Michael Angelo. It is exquisitely gorgeous. The dazzling crimson livery of the palace servants that you meet with again and again as you make the rounds, is of his designing also. These twin children of his taste are in perfect keeping with the noble surroundings of the Vatican. The Sistine Chapel with ceiling and altar-wall wholly painted by his cunning hand is the first thing one is shown after the grand stairway has been mounted and admired. The Scala Regia: And right "royal" stairs they are and quite worthy of being the entrance to the largest palace in the world.

Then, in dazzling and bewildering turn one passes through room after room, wholly adorned by Raphael, by Angelo, by Guido, by the first masters of many ages; on to the room where the peerless and priceless "Transfiguration" of Raphael, is mounted on its separate easel; on through suites of apartments crowded with rare works of art, the Apollo Belvedere; the Mercury Belvedere, the 3 master pieces of Canova, his Boxer, Wrestler and Perseus with Medusa's head; on to the great Library, down whose corridor vista we looked till a man turned to a boy at the further end: All these passed like a panorama before our wondering eyes, leaving us half stupefied with amazement when we got to the end.

The Pope's carriages are worthy of mention; three in number; with the astounding harness for the horses, hanging on racks beside them. Ponderous, gorgeous and gilded—throwing quite into the shade the hitherto unapproachable grandeur of our own Lord Mayor's "gilded coach"—never to emerge again, for comparison with the vehicles of "His Holiness." There were the "Lat Gals," "medium Gals" and "ordinary"—ordered out as the occasion required extra display or a simple airing; but the papacy is under a cloud and "the church" sits widowed in the Vatican now, in the person of her reputed Head. The Pope goes out in state no more. His carriages have not turned a wheel since '70, his horses rattle their halter chains idly in the grand stable, he never leaves his palace now, nor goes to mass at St. Peter's; nor does anything the old Popes did in public nor will he till his "temporal authority" is restored and his "riled" civil "sovereignty" is given back. Let us hope the carriages will never be used again, and that the "Holy Father" will stick to what was good enough for St. Peter and St. Paul—ecclesiastical privilege and right.

The dry weather is making the corn turn yellow.

Geo. Doll, a popular boot and shoe drammer was in town yesterday. Wm. M. Weber, of Knoxville, Tenn., is visiting at this place.

The day of the election draweth nigh, but there is not much excitement this time. We think everything will go off quietly and without much noise.

For the next four weeks things will be lively at this place. The Teacher's Institute will begin next Monday and hold for five days. Then the election and on the 15th day following that circuit court will convene. The indications are that the dockets for this term of court will be very light.

We have not heard of any one applying for the position of "correspondent" for the INTERIOR JOURNAL from this place. Perhaps they think it would be too hard work to write news for so new a paper. We are ready and willing to relinquish our "position" to any one who will undertake to do better than we have tried to do, and who will suit the editor. Hope all will not speak at once. (You suit us O. K. when you write, but you do not write often enough. Ed.)

One hundred and thirty-five convicts were sent from the Kentucky Penitentiary yesterday, to work in the coal mines in Western Kentucky.

Lord Londesdale and Sir George Chetwynd had aistic encounter, growing out of the attention each was paying to Mrs. Langtry.

O. D. Brown, who killed the town marshal of Versailles several years ago, was given 14 years in the penitentiary Wednesday. We hope he will have to serve it.

In accordance with the advice of Gen. Sheridan, the Secretary of the Interior has decided to turn over to the War Department the complete control of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservation in the Indian Territory.

Out of twenty-eight infected cattle in Mr. Joseph Bond's herd in Scott county, nine died and nineteen were slaughtered Saturday evening. The spread of the disease has therefore been stopped in its incipiency.

At Summerside, Ky., two attachés of Wallace & Co's circus became involved in a row with Wm Grimesley. One of the men kicked Grimesley, who retaliated by stabbing and killing his assailant. Another showman took up the fight, but was dispatched by the knife of White, a friend of Grimesley's.

THE intensely hot weather has had a very depressing effect on all kinds of business. The thermometer has registered as high as 100°, but we have heard of no one seriously affected by the heat. Eight persons died from its effects in Louisville in one day and the mortality in other cities was even greater.

ONE of the many attractions at the Hustonville Fair will be a balloon ascent on the first day by "the heroine of the 19th century," Mlle. LeBirch, who will make her flight to the clouds on a single trapeze bar, on which she will give a darting performance as the "City of Berlin" rises in the air. It will be worth going many miles to see.

GROUND was broken on the Chesapeake & Nashville Wednesday at Gallatin, accompanied by much enthusiasm and speech making. A bank president used the pick and a lawyer the shovel for the first cartload of dirt and it was dumped by another prominent citizen. The people are in great glee over the beginning of the grand enterprise. J. C. Bodemer is the best man that could have gotten the work and he deserves it.

DIED.—Near Rock Castle Springs, Ky., after a brief illness, Josephus Campbell, aged 77 years. He was born in Lincoln county, and was postmaster at Stanford for many years. A large circle of friends and acquaintances will recall kindly Uncle Seaf and Aunt Mandy. An honest, just and charitable old man has gone to a goodly reward.
